Notes:

On The President's Wedding Anniversary, not even Christian Rauch's mother visiting from the fatherland could spare him his first yellow card. Sad but true. But the evening started very differently. As is tradition for President Menninger, he actually welcomes honorable members to his home for pre-drinks. This time the shoe gazing eastern-euro goth music was swapped for massage music.

Fun fact: he used to also host "Desi dinner", but thanks to getting red carded by ousted member Duanne Kaufmann, that no longer happens.

"If I can't hear you, you won't come in", shouted President Menninger from the 'white house' rooftop on the hill (a.k.a. The 941). Perhaps he took this to heart a bit too much, as most of the attendees left the white house, not being heard/let in. The important ones however made it onto the roof (Leom H., Rob B. and President Sven).

Once at the main event of the soiree – Taj Mahal – things heated up, as they tend to. Matt B. immediately drew the suspiciousness of neighbouring tables with his smooth catch of a tossed beer. In the meantime, Leom received a suspicious ring on his miniature computer (the type people shove down their pants for some reason). Apparently a notification from "Grinder" (foreshadowing?)

Joni drew the attention of the president with his order of Chicken Tikka a '2' in hotness, but made up for it by landing the crew free drinks after having spotted a lemon plastic cup (this is where my notes get fuzzy), perhaps it was in his food.

At the end of the day, not even the bizarre videos could dampen the mood. A decent score in the mid sevens and a good time was had by all.
